Palindromes

Palindromes – words and sentences that read the same backwards – have been popular since ancient times. The Germans have even come up with a palindromic word –Eibohphobie –that means a fear of palindromes.

 The concept and original examples on this page were provided by Adam Jacot de Bono.*

Portuguese

- Socorram-me, subi no ônibus em Marrocos.
  Help me, I took a bus in Morocco.
- A base do teto desaba.
  The base of the ceiling collapses.
- O lobo ama o bolo.
  The wolf loves the cake.
- Ame o poema.
  Love the poem.
- A mala nada na lama.
  The suitcase swims in the mud.
- A torre da derrota.
  The tower of defeat.

Spanish

- Dábale arroz a la zorra el abad.
  The abbot gave rice to the vixen.
- Ligar es ser ágil.
  Flirting is agile.
- Ana lleva avellana.
  Ana takes a nut.
- Reconocer.
  Recognise.
- Luz azul.
  Blue light.
- Sobornos son robos.

- Amor a Roma.
  Love to Rome.
- Somos o no somos.
  Either we are, or we are not.

Tongue twisters

From 'Around the rugged rock, the ragged rascal ran' to 'red leather, yellow leather', one aspect of mastering a language is being able to master its tongue twisters. They are always decidedly odd sentences:

- Combien de sous sont ces saucissons-ci?
  Ces saucissons-ci sont six sous (French): "How much are these sausages here? These sausages here are six cents".

- Zwei schwarze schleimige Schlangen sitzen zwischen zwei spitzen Steinen und zischen (German): "Two black slimy snakes sit between two pointed stones and hiss".
